A Romance of Progress

By ALBERT PAYSON TERRHUNE

ARCHIMEDES—The first fresh vegetable discovered by H. Berris.

Through the crowded streets of the ancient Sicilian city of Syracuse one day late in the third century, B. C., rushed an elderly man, bald, wild of hair, and of a beard, who was yelling a Greek word "Eureka!"

The man who thus unconventionally burst upon the public gaze was Archimedes, greatest of old-time inventors and mathematicians. The reason for his peculiar action was that a certain amazing discovery he had just worked out had so elated him that he absent-mindedly forgot everything else in the joy of the moment.

And this is how the discovery was made: King Hiero, Greek ruler of Syracuse, had ordered a heavy and beautiful gold crown constructed for himself. He had reason to suspect, that the jeweler to whom he had entrusted the task had cheated him by mixing a quantity of alloy with the gold that went into the making of this royal emblem. But Hiero had no means of proving his suspicions. He therefore sent for Archimedes, whom he admired as the wisest man in his realm, and asked him to find out some way whereby he could make certain of the presence and exact amount of alloy in the crown.

Archimedes undertook the problem, though he had no reason for supposing he could solve it. For days the matter was ever on his mind. One morning while thus pondering the problem and its solution, he stepped into his bath. As he did so he noticed that the water, already full to the brim, overflowed when his body entered the water. This was a simple phenomenon. A million people had observed similar action on the part of water, but to none of them had it suggested any special idea.

To Archimedes, however, the incident meant something. He instantly, while still bathing, set to work on the great "Archimedes Principle," still in use. This principle, briefly, asserts that any object plunged into liquid sustains an upward pressure equal to the weight of the water it displaces. In other words, that the body immersed loses as much weight while under water as the weight of an equal volume of the liquid itself. From this it was but a step for him to figure out an absurdly simple plan for determining the amount of alloy in Hiero's crown. He would drop the crown into a vessel full of water and then, after removing it, drop in an equal weight of gold and watch the difference of the two overflows.

Delighted at this double mental feat, Archimedes leaped from the bath and out into the streets shouting abroad his great discovery. He was heavily fined for his indiscreet action and rewarded by Hiero with a laurel crown for his invention.

Nor was this the only scientific discovery Archimedes made in Hiero's behalf. The king had a magnificent galley, whose hold became full of water. With the primitive appliances of the time it was well-nigh impossible to bail it. He appealed to Archimedes. The latter planned out a water-tight cylinder, which should run from the bottom of the hold to the upper air. Inside this cylinder he arranged a long, spiral, close-fitting screw, air tight, and twisted by a crank from above. By turning this screw the water was of course drawn up from the hold through the cylinder.

In mathematics Archimedes excelled. He was the first to discover the relations between the sphere, the cone, and the measurement of the circle. He also discovered the principle of the lever. He was the first to know the area of the circle and the measurement of the sphere.

Those were the days of Greek decadence. Marcellus, the Roman general, besieged Syracuse. Archimedes at once turned his talents to account in devising catapults and other war engines that worked havoc on the invaders. He is even said to have arranged a collection of burning glasses in such a way as to set fire once to the attacking Roman fleet.

Marcellus, like all the world, regarded Archimedes with reverence. He gave strict orders that, in case the city should be captured, Archimedes and all his property were to be spared. But when, in 212 B. C., the Romans, after a three years' siege, stormed Syracuse, Archimedes fell victim to his own absent-mindedness.

The victorious soldiers, rushing through the city, came upon a man, 75 years old, seated in the middle of the market-place, tracing geometrical figures in the sand with the point of his staff. It was Archimedes. He was so absorbed in puzzling out a problem in mathematics that he did not even know the city was captured. As the soldiers ran up he cried warningly:

"Don't disturb my figures with your great stamping feet!"

The next instant a half dozen spear-points passed through his body.

Mansfield's Baron Chevalier.

Richard Mansfield's first great success in January, 1883, was as Baron Chevalier in "A Parisian Romance," a part that came to him through the refusal of the veteran J. H. Stoddard in A. M. Palmer's Union Square company to play the part. Mansfield gave many hours to a study of its possibilities and the details of a realistic makeup.

"It was probably the most realistically detailed figure of refined moral and physical depravity, searched to its inevitable end, the stage has ever seen. For a moment after the curtain fell there was a hush of awe and surprise; then the audience found itself and called Mansfield to the footlights a dozen times. But neither then nor thereafter would he appear until he had removed the wig and makeup of the dead baron. There was no occasion to change his clothes. He wore the conventional evening suit. The effect of shaven underziness was purely a muscular effect of the actor. The contrast between the figure that fell at the head of the stairs and the athletic young gentleman who acknowledged the applause was no anticlimax."

"Richard Mansfield, the Man and the Actor," by Paul Whitcomb.

"Father! What! Another dressmaker's bill? My dear girl, you should fix your mind on something higher than dress. Daughter—So I have, papa. I've got my mind fixed on a love of a hat in a downtown milliner's window. And, just think, it's only $19.98! You'll get it for me, won't you, papa, dear?"

Convention Notes.
Chairman Patrick received the praise of the delegates and the candidates for the same in an impartial manner in which he conducted the convention.

It was the most harmonious convention ever held in Breathitt County for county nominees.

It is conceded that the ticket is a good one.

The ticket is a winner from top to bottom.

Many of the Republicans that attended were disappointed in that there was no disturbance or confusion.

The K. P. Convention Held Here Tuesday.

The Knights of Pythias District Convention held in this city on Tuesday was an occasion long to be remembered by the people of Jackson. Prominent Pythians from the District and from various sections of the State were in attendance.

The open session held in the College Chapel in the afternoon was largely attended and the programme rendered furnished a rare treat to the Jackson public. Judge G. W. Fleenor presided at the Convention and welcomed the visitors in an eloquent address, which was responded to by Past Grand Chancellor Thomas G. Stuart, of Winchester, in his own inimitable style. Addresses by Grand Chancellor O. H. Pollard on the "Object, aims and achievements of Pythian Knighthood" and by Grand Keeper of Records and Seal J. W. Carter on the "Practical Work of the Order in Kentucky" proved an inspiration to the members of the Order. These two officers have been working hard in hand for the past eight months in an effort to disseminate the principles of Pythian Knighthood and their earnest appeals for higher ideals of American citizenship and better standards of American patriotism will long be remembered by the people who were fortunate enough to hear them. It is to be regretted that every citizen of Breathitt county could have not been present and heard these splendid addresses.

The people of Jackson are justly proud of the fact that in Grand Chancellor Pollard, Jackson is the possessor of a man who stands at the head of a great fraternity which under his able administration is rapidly taking the first position in the front rank as a leader of advanced thought in matters pertaining to the elevation of character and the improvement of citizenship. We are proud of the fact that the mountains of Kentucky have furnished to the Knights of Pythias a man who all the people consider to be the best Grand Chancellor that the Knights of Pythias have ever had in Kentucky.

The Convention closed with an elegant banquet provided by Pan Bowl Lodge No 122 of Jackson. At this banquet the local lodge entertained their lady friends and the visiting Knights. Hon. L. Y. Redwine as toastmaster sustained his reputation as the ideal Knight and a man of affairs. Covers were laid for 126 people and the banquet was pronounced by the Grand Lodge Officers present as the most elegant entertainment of its kind they had ever attended. At the banquet toasts were responded to as follows: "The Age of Chivalry" by Hon. R. C. Musick. Mr. Musick by his eloquence transported his hearers to the age of chivalry and won the hearts of all.

Colonel T. G. Stuart, Stuart's Toast, "The Ladies and their influence upon fraternal Organizations," completely captivated the hearts of the ladies. The Bachelor Knight was a subject assigned to Hon. L. F. Hanks, Editor of the Kentucky Pythian, whose wit displayed in the unique handling of the subject, kept the banqueters in an uproar from the moment he was introduced to the conclusion of his remarks.

We are glad that the Knights of Pythias held their convention in our City. The standing of the Order for purity of life, of nobility of character, its record for benevolence and charity cannot fail to commend it to the highest consideration of every man who loves his country and stands for improvement of citizenship and elevation of humanity. Jackson should be proud of the fact that it is the home of a splendid Knights of Pythias lodge, and our people are all proud of our Grand Chancellor.

C. M. GILLUM,
Sec'y.

The Nell Law recently enacted by our Legislature which is given below is presented to the people of Breathitt County for their consideration and action. From a careful reading of it, we can easily learn that this evasion of our prohibitory laws by means of selling five gallon lots, a practice common with distillers in this county, is just as gross a violation of law as the retailing of liquor in pints or by the drink. We are advised by the Anti-Saloon League authorities that this law is in force and applies to our county. Such being the case, what shall we do about it? Why not punish all unlawful sellers of liquor—the distiller as well as the bootlegger?

R. L. KINNAIRD.

"It shall be unlawful to sell by wholesale any spirituous, vinous, or other intoxicating liquors, regardless of the name by which it is called, (except) manufacturers selling liquors of their own make, at the place of manufacture to a wholesale dealer or a licensed retail dealer in any county, district, precinct, town or city, where the sale of such liquors has been prohibited by special act of the General Assembly or by vote of the people under the local option act. Any person violating this act shall be deemed guilty of violating the local option law and shall be subject to a trial and punishment according to the provisions of same and its amendments."

Approved March 19, 1908.

On the 20th of June five shots were fired from ambush at Jacob Woods, Robert Woods and John B. Lewis. The shooting took place about 9:30 in the morning, Rhodes Hall and his little boy were passing, and was in thirty or forty yards of the hidden party, when the first shot was fired; Hall hid by the side of the road till the shooting stopped. The bushes were so thick that he failed to recognize any of the party. Uncle John B. and Rhodes went to where the shooting was done and the shoe tracks looked like they were made by a No 7 shoe. Uncle John B. says that he has lived in good heart up to this time, and that he is not discouraged at being ambushed, for he knows that he is advocating sound principles. He feels that his bold stand against the sale of whisky is the cause, he believes that God will preserve him to see the sale of whisky stopped on Long's Creek. We ask the County Judge, County Attorney and the Courts of Justice if they are going to let the violators of the law drive out the law abiding citizens?

ding citizens? Will the authorities allow whisky shipped to the depot, then hauled out through the country for distribution. Sunday school can hardly be held on Long's Creek, or preaching scarcely in this part of the country; there appears to be no officers in this part of the country that will prosecute this shameful curse, will the county authorities give the people of this part of the county peace officers that will take hold of these violations with sufficient courage to bring the blind tigers to a halt for awhile, the citizens don't want to be shot down in their corn-fields by the fiends of drunkenness.

Armor Plated Pawnshops.

The inside of a Chinese pawnshop is a terra incognita to most people, Chinese and English. Few are admitted within its mysterious walls except those directly connected with the business. A traveler was recently permitted to inspect one in an inland town and was surprised to find the entire building incased in sheet iron about one-eighth of an inch thick. It must have cost a large sum to build an iron house within the usual lofty brick edifice, yet there it was, even to the roof. It served a twofold purpose—a protection against fire and thieves. Yet even within this iron castle night watchmen armed with heavy revolvers and clad in bullet proof jackets ever keep watch.

FOR YOUR HEALTH'S SAKE

WHAT QUARANTINE MEANS.

Don't get it into your head that strict quarantine regulations are all right when enforced against your neighbor and all wrong and needless when there is a case of contagious sickness in your own family. It is as much the business of the health officers to compel you to obey the law and thus protect your neighbor's children as it is for them to enforce the law against your neighbor for the protection of your children.

This is the only way to look at matters of this kind. When the department says that your child, ill with diphtheria, must not mingle with other children, even though it is able to be up and running about, you should see to it that these instructions are carried out to the letter. And the same should be true respecting any and all the instructions given by the health officers for the protection of the public health.
